Subject: Comment on definition of "transitory" for public records": I AM OPPOSED

I am dismayed to learn that a new definition of "transitory" is being proposed that will deny citizens access to what is now a most common way to communicate. It is important for citizens to be able to review the actions of its elected and appointed officials to know what is being discussed, proposed and how decisions are made. As a retired law librarian / director of a large multi-office law firm library, I know lawyers also use this information to understand intent. All of us benefit from free access to what should be public information.

I hope this definition will not be used, since it cuts off our right to know what is transpiring.
