Subject: Open Government

Government records of any kind: text, email, letters, minutes, records of meetings or any business conducted by persons elected, appointed or employed by the State of Wisconsin are and should be the property of the public. Communication methods change with the times and preserving these records for review by the public should always be the rule. All communication has significance - routine or otherwise.

If you or any other person who claims office, by appointment, election or employment, do not agree that democracy requires open government, you have no business holding the position.

We should not have to petition you to do your job ethically or properly.
