Greetings,

It would not serve the public in any positive way to either redefine what constitutes a "public record," or "close the door" of access to any form of records that pertain to the governing, or election process. The Wisconsin Open Records Law has served the citizens of Wisconsin very well in the past and limiting availability of, or access to information about how public servants conduct their business would be a major step backwards in holding them responsible for their actions and decisions. I am TOTALLY AGAINST any changes to the Open Records Law!

Sincerely, Nick Schultz
