Subject: "Transitory communications"

Sirs:

To label all electronic communication as transitory is to ignore reality and to pretend that the last 100 years of scientific and technological advances in communication have not occurred. We no longer rely on the Pony Express or the telegraph as the latest communication tools.

This is a blatant attempt to hide government records from the public and to continue to wrest control of the government from the people. Back room deals and corruption will continue to move us toward the plutocracy that Wisconsin is becoming. This is the latest power grab by the current administration.

There's no good reason for redefining "transitory records". And the idea that electronic communications should be exempt because they supposedly have only temporary value is patently ridiculous.
