Subject: electronic communications

To Whom It May Concern:

We live in the 21st century, the electronic communication age. Businesses, organizations, corporations, schools, universities, libraries, etc. and individuals, all use electronic publications for all purposes- registrations, payments, communications of all types. Some are kept; others are not. Schools teach young children how to use these devices if they have not learned from adult and older siblings.

Government officials also benefit from these digital communications. If their intent is to be trustworthy to the citizens they represent, then all communications should be made to available under the open records legislation.

Please know that the intent of this communication is to ask that WI citizens be kept apprised of their representatives and that all communications continue to be a part of the public record and the conscience of our elected officials.

I am opposed to the new definition of "transitory" communication that should be exempt from the open records legislation.
