To the Commission and Governor Walker:

As a 36-year Wisconsin educator I was consistently- and sometimes rudely- reminded that my salary was on the Public dime. The hours I spent on the job and what I did during those hours were answerable to the taxpayers who paid my wages. Every part of my day, from classroom time, to meetings to any and all forms of communication were subject to the scrutiny of those who were responsible for my holding this position of public trust. So too, are all of those parts of the position of ANY and ALL who are paid by the Public dollar. Legislators are not an exception, and should be, by all rights, the rule and model followed.

ANY attempt to curb the public's ability to scrutinize any aspect of the work of ANY public figure is nothing less than a red flag. ALL legislative activity, in whatever form it may take, MUST continue to be open for the taxpayers to know, and perhaps question in order that "clean" government continues to be an aspect of Wisconsin life.

Ever changing technology does not open the door to questioning what is and is not communication that should be available to the taxpaying public. ALL communication by public servants, regardless of form, is the property of the voting public. Any legislator, indeed any public servant, who does not agree with this, needs to be relieved of the public trust.

Very truly yours,
