ANY attempt to to restrict or impede the collection of information and/or records by the electorate on the actions of government officials is abhorrent. Whether It's Hillary Clinton using her personal phone in pursuit of government work, or local officials failing to post notices of meetings and agendas goes against all concepts of the public's right to know what it's government is doing in it's name.

Texts and emails are a large part of of life in personal, business and government levels. To restrict access to them will blind the public to wrong doing and and excesses of it's elected and appointed officials. Please carefully rethink any support of such restrictions whether electronic or printed. To fail to do so implies a willingness to allow such improprieties to occur. To fail to publicly oppose them begs suspicion.
