Hello,

It is my understanding that the Public Records Board has chosen to redefine all electronic communications used by public boards, commissions, and government officials as “transitory”, thus making these communications exempt from public disclosure. Much of today’s business is conducted electronically, and it is essential that communications between public officials on public policy be transparent to the people who elect those officials and the boards they appoint. Please change this definition so that this information is available to me and other citizens of this state.

Sincerely,

Barbara Sullivan
